Education sector insights

GOOD NEWS, BAD NEWS: Financial confidence up, financial preparedness at risk

Employees are feeling more confident about both their healthcare understanding (48%) and their overall financial situation compared to last year (36%). Yet many in the education sector remain unprepared to absorb acute medical expenses with 55% reporting they couldn't cover $1,000 in unexpected health costs, causing 36% to delay or avoid treatment. Nearly half of U.S. workers feel they underestimate the total cost of an injury or illness (49%) and lack the financial resilience to manage unforeseen medical bills (48%).

KEY TAKEAWAY: Health insurance wasn't designed to help cover everything you may encounter during an illness or accident. The Aflac WorkForces Report reveals a growing demand for comprehensive health coverage and supplemental insurance as valuable components of a benefits package. These offerings can help with rising medical costs and provide employees with added peace of mind by helping to reduce financial stress when needed most.
